On behalf of Clean Wisconsin and the more than 5,000 undersigned supporters (see attached):

With the recent release of the Great Lakes & Mississippi River Interbasin Study (GLMRIS), it's clear that the best, most effective solution for preventing the spread of invasive species, including but not limited to Asian carp, between the Mississippi River and the Great Lakes basins is the permanent separation of these two critically important national water systems.

I applaud the Army Corps of Engineers not only for taking up this task, but also for recognizing the urgency of the situation, working under a shortened timetable, and completing what was once meant to be a 10-year study in less than two years. By engaging the public and many stakeholders in the process, the GLMRIS report reflects the consensus view of the majority of stakeholders: the approach providing the best level of protection against the spread of Asian carp and other aquatic invasive species between the two water systems is permanent physical separation, particularly around Chicago, where several manmade connections exist that could allow invasive fish and other aquatic species to spread. Specifically, the Army Corps' Alternative Plans 5 and 6 are best suited to accomplish permanent separation.

Under your current Congressional authorization, I urge the Army Corps to immediately begin implementing a solution that will permanently and physically separate the two basins. The Great Lakes are extremely valuable to the local, state and regional economies that depend on them and to the quality of life in Great Lakes communities.

Invasive species already cost us billions of dollars each year and impair public enjoyment of our waters and beaches. It is imperative that we prevent future introductions even as we manage past invaders and work diligently to restore the health of our Great Lakes and Mississippi River basin ecosystems to enhance their resilience against invasions and other future threats. As invasive species like Asian carp continue to tax the waters of the Mississippi River system, please take quick and effective action to protect the Great Lakes from these same threats. In so doing, we will ensure the greatest level of protection for both of these great national water systems for the long-term future.

Recipient: U.S. Army Corps of Engineers
