I am active in several Lake Michigan organizations, and have attended numerous forums and workshops regarding the carp. After careful consideration, I conclude that some form of hydroseparation is necessary. It won't be easy, and certain businesses won't like it (barges and such), but it will be better for our ecosystem, and for our future. Yes, it will be a major project, but we don't want Asian carp, nor other invasive species still to come, to make our entire Lake a dead zone.
