It is my understanding that the Corps of Engineers was tasked by Congress to stop the infiltration of invasive species from the Mississippi water shed into the Great Lakes. It is also my understanding that the Corps is now taking public comments not only on preventing but "reducing the risk". The study is slated to continue until 2015. I, being a fisherman of and nearby resident of Lake Erie, am extremely concerned about this very real threat. I can not understand why the Corps is taking such a slow approach. Why not just do as Congress has dictated? The potential cost of lost sporting activity to northern Ohio would be immense. The cost of closing the pathway between the two systems would be little in comparison. Please stop this unfortunately typical snail paced approach and get the job done.
