I boat and use the Alton pool north of St.Louis Mo. for recreation along with the Kaskaskia River. Both of these riverways have been devastated by the invasive Asian carp. They have not only overpopulated and driven down numbers of native fish in this area, they also pose a great danger to boaters as they jump in and around moving vessels as they travel the riverways. This section of the Mississippi and Kaskaskia rivers are all but ruined for recreational boaters. Don't let this happen to the Great Lakes. It is time we see the environment as being more important for the good of all v.s. protecting a relatively small segment of industry driving this issue.
