The Thousand Islands are just one portion of the Great Lakes where the residents are entirely dependent on tourism and the quality of the river experience for their livelihoods. Reducing the risk of Asian Carp reaching the lakes is not an option. Prevention is the only solution. Just as with other invasive species, all it takes is a single pair for the entire watershed to be overrun. Zebra mussels and goby are just two examples, neither anywhere near as much of a threat as Asian Carp. Please act NOW to do everything possible to ensure this threat is not realized.
